

Die Bladsye

Three pages. One calmer week.

A month, a week and a day — printed, so the whole household can see it.

Print as many as you need. Stick them on the fridge. Write in pencil.

Die Maand

Month on one page

Birthdays, sports days, the fees, the long weekends. Fill the dates in yourself — it works for any month, any year.

Die Week

Sunday-night page

Seven days, and next to each one the question that actually matters: who is taking it?

Die Dag

This morning's page

The timeline, the lunchboxes, the bags, and what tomorrow already needs from you.

HOW TO USE THEM

1. Print Die Maand once a month. Write the dates in — one colour per child.
2. Print Die Week every Sunday evening. Ten minutes, before the week starts.
3. Print Die Dag for the mornings that are already full at 06:00.
4. Every row has a “who is taking it” space. Fill it in. That is the whole trick — a thing with nobody's name on it is still yours by default.

Paper works. It just doesn't remind you.

Hartsrus is these same pages on your phone — where the school dates arrive on their own, the reminder goes to the person who is actually taking it, and next term does not start as a blank page again.
